

Internship - Sculpture and turf building

Ólöf Nordal, artist and Associate Professor of Fine Art at Iceland University of the Arts is looking for interns.

The work takes place from middle of June to October in Reykjavik and surrounding. Exact timeframe and hours will be an agreement between the artist and each individual student. Students on BA and MA levels can apply.

The main project which lies ahead is an upcoming exhibition by the artist. The assistance includes the making of new works and the remaking of older works.

The main project is the building and shaping of new sculptures made of sod. This involves physical labor like gathering of material, cutting turf, drying and transporting; followed by work on location in building and shaping sculptures. During the internship students learn about Icelandic turf building tradition, including the ancient craft of cutting, drying and building with turf.

Some activities take place outside. Students need to have appropriate clothes for excavation work and suitable shoes for working in boggy grounds.

Those interested can send their name and few words about themselves to olofnordal@lhi.is
